

Saint Louis University Public Law Review

Volume 24
Number 1 *Out of the Closet and Into the Light:
The Legal Issues of Sexual Orientation (Volume XXIV, No. 1)*

Article 4

2005

Introduction

Mitchell Katine
Williams, Birnberg & Andersen, L.L.P.

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarship.law.slu.edu/plr>

Part of the Law Commons

Recommended Citation

Katine, Mitchell (2005) "Introduction," Saint Louis University Public Law Review. Vol. 24 : No. 1 , Article 4.
Available at: <https://scholarship.law.slu.edu/plr/vol24/iss1/4>

This Introduction is brought to you for free and open access by Scholarship Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Saint Louis University Public Law Review by an authorized editor of Scholarship Commons. For more information, please contact Susie Lee.

INTRODUCTION

MITCHELL KATINE*

Gays and lesbians in the United States currently enjoy the most respected position, legally and socially, since coming out as an identifiable group. However far we may have come, we continue to be vilified and remain one of the last minority groups to achieve full equal rights. Recent events have caused me to reflect on the gay and lesbian community by recounting two philosophical phrases which I often use in describing my life to-wit: “sometimes dreams come true,” and “be careful what you wish for, because you may get it.” Both of these propositions have direct application to the *Lawrence v. Texas*¹ Supreme Court decision. When John Lawrence and Tyron Garner were arrested late in the evening of September 17, 1998, no one ever imagined that their case would go from the lowest criminal court in Texas to the highest court of our country and change the legal landscape for gays and lesbians forever. Of course, that is what we wished for.

At the time of their arrest, Texas had a law entitled the “Homosexual Conduct” statute, found in section 21.06 of the Texas Penal Code.² Violation of the statute was punishable by a maximum fine of $500.00. The statute was enacted in 1973 when the Texas legislature decriminalized oral and anal sex among persons of the opposite sex, but created a cause of action against individuals engaging in intimate sexual contact with persons of the same sex. The statute was rarely enforced, although it was selectively used as a badge of dishonor to classify all gays and lesbians in the State of Texas as “per se” criminals. Many other states had similar statutes.

* Mitchell Katine is a partner with the Houston law firm of Williams, Birnberg & Andersen, L.L.P. Mr. Katine served as local counsel and cooperating attorney with Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc. in representing the defendants, John Geddes Lawrence and Tyron Garner, in Lawrence v. Texas. Mr. Katine practices in the areas of employment law, litigation, real estate disputes, and often represents gays and lesbians in a variety of matters. He has also taught HIV and the Law at both South Texas College of Law and the University of Houston Law Center as an adjunct professor for many years. Mr. Katine currently serves as vice chair of the State Bar of Texas standing committee on disability issues. Most importantly, Mr. Katine and his partner are proud parents of two infants recently adopted from another country.

1. 539 U.S. 558 (2003).

2. TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 21.06 (2003) provided: “(a) A person commits an offense if he engages in deviate sexual intercourse with another individual of the same sex. (b) An offense under this Section is a Class C misdemeanor.”

Statutes such as the Homosexual Conduct statute were upheld in 1986 when the Supreme Court issued its horrific decision in Bowers v. Hardwick.³ In Bowers, the Court held that the United States Constitution did not protect homosexual sodomy. The decision was littered with inaccuracies and homophobic conclusions. The Bowers decision was often credited as being the “gay exception” to the Constitution. It also permitted state and local governments to treat gays and lesbians as second class citizens, as well as to invade the private lives of heterosexuals in circumstances when their private conduct offended the morals of someone in authority. Bowers was also often cited as authority in the area of family law to deny custody and/or restrict visitation to gay and lesbian parents when involved in litigation with a prior spouse of heterosexual persuasion.

Subsequent to their arrest, Lawrence and Garner were referred to me for legal assistance. At first I found it hard to believe that anyone would be arrested simply for violating the Texas Homosexual Conduct statute. To my surprise and astonishment, I learned that the only charge levied by the arresting officers against Lawrence and Garner was the violation of the Homosexual Conduct statute. No other allegations or charges of any kind were brought. Accordingly, it appeared to me that the facts presented a unique opportunity to once and for all challenge the Texas Homosexual Conduct statute. During the years preceding the arrest of Lawrence and Garner, I had come to know and respect a national gay and lesbian legal organization in New York named Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc. I quickly obtained Lawrence and Garner’s permission to bring Lambda Legal into the case as constitutional law experts. Lambda Legal agreed to serve as lead counsel in the case while I served in the capacity of local cooperating attorney.

Lawrence v. Texas spent approximately four years winding its way through the Texas judicial system until the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ultimately upheld the Homosexual Conduct statute,⁴ leaving Lawrence and Garner convicted of the crime of homosexual conduct. A petition for writ of certiorari was filed with the Supreme Court requesting three questions be accepted by the Court:

1. Whether Petitioners’ criminal convictions under the Texas Homosexual Conduct law - which criminalizes sexual intimacy by same-sex couples, but not identical behavior by different-sex couples - violate the Fourteenth Amendment guarantee of equal protection of the laws?

3. 478 U.S. 186 (1986).

4. Lawrence v. State, 41 S.W.3d 349 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001).

2. Whether Petitioners' criminal convictions for adult consensual sexual intimacy in the home violate their vital interest in liberty and privacy protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment?
3. Whether Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986), should be overruled?⁵

The Harris County district attorney's office initially waived filing a reply to the petition for a writ of certiorari. Our first indication that Lawrence v. Texas might be heard by the Supreme Court was when the Court ordered the district attorney's office to file a reply. Shortly thereafter, we received word that our petition for a writ of certiorari had been granted and we were headed to Washington, D.C.

Oral arguments could not have gone better. Our side of the case was presented by an openly gay attorney named Paul Smith who had appeared numerous times before the Supreme Court. The questioning by the Justices during oral argument was unusual, informative, and entertaining. Due to the tension of the topic and the numerous gay and lesbian citizens present in the audience, various questions, as well as responses, often resulted in restrained laughter or sighs, depending on the question or verbal interaction.

On June 26, 2003, I was sitting at my desk in my office in Houston, Texas waiting for word on the decision. I had notified Lawrence and Garner that a decision would be coming soon, but to remain reserved due to the serious possibility that we could lose. At approximately 9:12 a.m., my telephone rang and I received the news of our victory from my retired mother in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. She had been watching television and received word of our victory through television news. My reaction to my mother's news was recorded by numerous television cameras and newspaper reporters who were stationed in my office to capture my immediate response. After receiving the word of victory from my mother, I received more detailed information on the depth and breadth of the decision.

The language used by Justice Kennedy in the majority opinion of Lawrence was sweeping, historic, and left little room for doubt as to the commitment of the Supreme Court in protecting the lives and relationships of gays and lesbians: "When sexuality finds overt expression in intimate conduct with another person, the conduct can be but one element in a personal bond that is more enduring. The liberty protected by the Constitution allows homosexual persons the right to make this choice."⁶ Of equal significance in having the Court declare the Homosexual Conduct statute unconstitutional was the Court expressly overruling the decision in Bowers by stating that "Bowers

5. Petition for Writ of Certiorari at i, Lawrence (No. 02-102).

6. Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 567.

was not correct when it was decided, and it is not correct today. It ought not to remain binding precedent. Bowers v. Hardwick should be and now is overruled.”⁷ The Court further held that, “The petitioners are entitled to respect for their private lives. The State cannot demean their existence or control their destiny by making their private sexual conduct a crime. Their right to liberty under the Due Process Clause gives them the full right to engage in their conduct without intervention of the government.”⁸ The last substantive sentence of the opinion embodies the essence of the entire majority decision by stating, “As the Constitution endures, persons in every generation can invoke its principals in their own search for greater freedom.”⁹ Upon reading the Lawrence decision, I finally had a dream come true. The highest court in our country had declared that gays and lesbians were no longer exempt from the protections of the Constitution, and further acknowledged the rights of all homosexuals to engage in intimate association with one another without being or feeling less of a citizen than their heterosexual neighbors.

A few months after Lawrence was decided, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts issued its historic decision legalizing same-sex marriage in Goodridge v. Department of Public Health.¹⁰ While the decision was based upon the Massachusetts Constitution, the court began its opinion by citing the Lawrence decision:

[The Lawrence Court] affirmed that the core concept of common human dignity protected by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution precludes government intrusion into the deeply personal realms of consensual adult expression of intimacy and one’s choice of an intimate partner. The Court also reaffirmed the central role that decisions whether to marry or have children bear in shaping one’s identity. The Massachusetts Constitution is, if anything, more protective of individual liberty and equality than the Federal Constitution; it may demand broader protection for fundamental rights; and it is less tolerant of government intrusion into the protected spheres of private life. Barred access to the protections, benefits, and obligations of civil marriage, a person who enters into an intimate, exclusive union with another of the same sex is arbitrarily deprived of membership in one of our community’s most rewarding and cherished institutions. That exclusion is incompatible with the constitutional principals of respect for individual autonomy and equality under law.¹¹

The Goodridge decision goes on to “declare that barring an individual from the protections, benefits, and obligations of civil marriage solely because that person would marry a person of the same sex violates the Massachusetts

7. Id. at 578.

8. Id.

9. Id. at 579.

10. 798 N.E.2d 941 (Mass. 2003).

11. Id. at 948-49 (citations omitted).

Constitution.”¹² By overruling Bowers and setting forth judicial principals of equality, privacy, and liberty regarding gay and lesbian relationships, I feel as if the Lawrence decision paved the way for the Supreme Judicial Court to issue its historic decision legalizing gay and lesbian marriage in the State of Massachusetts.

Unfortunately, the Lawrence and Goodridge decisions, as well as the events in San Francisco concerning gay and lesbian marriages,¹³ provided a perfect opportunity for the conservative Republican Party to gain a political advantage in the 2004 election of George W. Bush. As reported by numerous sources, many voters explained that their decision to vote for President Bush was based upon the moral issues involved in the campaign.¹⁴ Had the Lawrence decision not come out when it did, followed by the Goodridge decision, the Republican Party would not have been able to take advantage of the opportunity to use gay and lesbian marriages as a catalyst to further its conservative views on election day. Hence, the election between George W. Bush and John Kerry may have had a different outcome were it not for the Lawrence and Goodridge decisions. Accordingly, we got what we had wished for, and now we must deal with the backlash.

Nevertheless, it has long been my belief that there will be many cases won and many cases lost in the fight for equal rights for gays and lesbians. The true advancement of this civil rights movement is not through winning cases, but is in winning the hearts and minds of America. In order to do so, gay and lesbian issues must be openly discussed and debated, and stereotypes must be dissolved. For example, during the weeks in which gay and lesbian couples were permitted to marry in San Francisco, California, the citizens of the United States saw in the media for the first time true gay and lesbian families and realized that the individuals who were seeking equal rights of marriage did not appear to be any different than themselves. Those events and the media exposure were priceless.

With the removal of Bowers and with the Supreme Court holding in Lawrence that moral disapproval alone is not sufficient to criminalize homosexual relationships, gays and lesbians can now fight, for the first time, for their true constitutional rights on equal footing with other oppressed groups. Unfortunately, there have been a number of subsequent court decisions which have declined to follow the principles of Lawrence. I believe it will take at least one, if not more, subsequent decisions by the Supreme Court to reaffirm that the Court truly meant what it said in the Lawrence decision. The Supreme Court will have an opportunity to readdress the issues of Lawrence in the area of gay and lesbian adoptions. In a case styled Loften v. Secretary of the Department of Children and Family Services,¹⁵ the Eleventh Circuit upheld a Florida law prohibiting gays and lesbians from adopting children, asserting that Lawrence was not applicable because the case involved children. I believe that the Eleventh Circuit's decision is erroneous in that it failed to understand the broader principals set forth in the Lawrence decision. A petition for writ of certiorari has been filed in the Loften case and hopefully will be granted, thus allowing the Supreme Court to reaffirm the principles set forth in the Lawrence decision.

12. Id. at 969.

13. Lockyer v. City and County of San Francisco, 95 P.3d 459, 464-66 (Cal. 2004) describes the events surrounding these marriages.

14. See, e.g., Joseph Curl & Julia Duin, Focus on Moral Values Tipped Vote for Bush, WASH. TIMES, Nov. 4, 2004, at A01; Thomas Oliphant, Who Reelected Bush?, BOSTON GLOBE, Nov. 14, 2004, at E11; Ellen Goodman, Taking Back 'Values', BOSTON GLOBE, Nov. 7, 2004, at D11; Bob Von Sternberg, 'Moral Values' Become Hot Political Currency, STAR TRIB. (Minneapolis/St. Paul), Nov. 15, 2004, at 1A.

As with other civil rights victories, once freedom has been tasted, it is often impossible to reverse and restrict the liberties enjoyed. As the youth of today mature, their opposition to gay and lesbian marriage is far less prevalent than that of their parents and grandparents. Accordingly, the future is very bright for gay and lesbian civil rights. As the Supreme Court said in Lawrence, persons in every generation can invoke the principals of the Constitution in their own search for greater freedom.¹⁶ As a relatively new parent, I am encouraged and excited for my children to live in a country where all people are judged based on what they do and how they act as opposed to whom they love.

John Lawrence and Tyron Garner were two individuals who were faced with an unfortunate situation and chose to fight for what they believed was right and just. Had they made a different decision to remain quiet and unnoticed, the world would literally be a different place today. I often encourage people to emulate Lawrence and Garner when confronted with a difficult decision. They made the decision to follow what they believed was right, and because they did, the Supreme Court was able to issue a decision which makes the world a better place for all to live. It has been my privilege and honor to know them and assist them in their journey.

15. 358 F.3d 804 (11th Cir. 2004).

16. Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 579.